

Letter of Recommendation:

November 2, 2010

I met David Fulton about three years ago in Cordova, Alaska during a fishing season when he told me about his experiences along with his love for photography.

David told me he would teach students about photography along with going on photo shoots in Costa Rica. This really started to get me interested in photography since I live in such a beautiful part of the world and with my life style of being on the water it gave me many opportunities of great outdoor photo's.

Last year I made the move and bought a Nikon and started my journey into photography. I hit a wall by not really understanding how to operate all my camera functions along with the basics of photography.

David came back to Cordova in the spring and started a class on photography and I got to go on several photo shoots along with learn about my camera and the basic rules of photography.

David's teaching style and how he breaks down the learning process to the laymen's terms along with his great hands on instruction increased my desire to further my photography.

David taught me the rule of thirds and the basic rules for composing photos, how to use my manual modes on my camera along with explaining exposure, bracketing, multiple exposures, focal points, depth of field, which filters to use, double exposures along with many other great hints and better ways to get great photos.

Getting away from the Auto modes of my camera and understanding the many different ways my digital camera works has taken me beyond any of my expectations when I first bought my camera. David also taught me how to use Photoshop and Corel Paintshop he also got me signed up in some great online photo sites where other photographers can see your work and critique and discuss ways on making photos better. Sharing my photos with others and discussing better ways of taking photos has been a great boost for me and I have met many other people with the same interests.

None of this would have happened without the great instructions and personal tutor sessions with David. He has taken a dream of mine and made into a great passion.

David would be a great instructor to anyone that has a minute interest in photography. His teaching style and easy going personality make learning very easy and fun. I personally had a great time learning what I thought was unachievable. Thank you David.... John
